*The AARC (Alameda AIDS Research Coalition) is a consortium of health sciences investigators at local universities (academic researchers), community-based organizations that work with the African American community (CBO researchers), and community members (community researchers) to answer significant scientific STI/HIV research questions. The AARC has been funded by the National Institute of Minority Health and Health Disparities (NIMHD) to develop strong, long-term relationships that bridge the gap between research and communities by developing trainings and forums. The organizers of AARC consist of UCSF-CAPS – University of California, San Francisco-Center for AIDS Prevention Studies, AIDS Project of the East Bay, Cal-PEP and WORLD.
